2. COMPREHENSION

Read the following passage carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

Of all the people who suffer abuse in the society, children are the most vulnerable. Their rights, therefore, should be safeguarded by every one. There are four key pillars of child rights as articulated in various legal documents that champion for the protection of children. The pillars comprise the survival, development, protection and participation rights for children. These four pillars are broad categorization of rights and within each broad category are several specific rights.

In the survival rights pillar are rights to basic needs such as food, clothing, shelter and medicare.

Development rights give children rights to be creative and imaginative. Children should be given an opportunity to play and engage in other leisure activities.

Protection rights shield children from all forms of harm. Such protection is a responsibility of the government and the society at large. Children should be protected from drug abuse, sexual exploitation, child labour and harmful cultural practices like female genital mutilation and early marriages. Children also have the right to participate actively and have a say in matters affecting their social, economic, religious, cultural and political lives. These rights make up the participation pillar.

Apart from rights, children also have a part to play so as to grow up into responsible adults. This includes responsibilities towards themselves, the family, society and the nation. Depending on their age and ability, children should be guided to work for the cohesion of the family by respecting their parents and elders, and assisting them. Indeed, children have a duty to preserve the spirit of tolerance, dialogue and consultation. They should contribute to the moral well-being of the society and preserve and strengthen the independence and integrity of their own country.
